Local cerebral blood flow (LCBF) was estimated by the radioactive xenon-133 clearance technique in six patients with cerebrovascular lesions. In all, 31 positron-emitting xenon-133 gas and an ethylene-diaminetetraacetic acid (EDTA) solution were injected into different parts of the brain. Regional measures of LCBF were calculated with the aid of a mathematical model that allowed for the estimation of the dispersion of the tracer within the brain tissue. This technique gave LCBF estimates in the low ml/100 g/min range in cortex and subcortical regions where blood supply was not significantly altered. Similar values were found in the nonischemic white matter. In the ischemic brain there was a reduction of up to 40% in the LCBF measurements.Q: How to construct a good purpose statement for homework? I have to write a 10 page (double spaced, 12 pt Times, 1" margins) paper on my choice of topic. The class rules are that there should be no profanity or obscene words, no hate speech, no advertising and the topic should be well-explained. I've written a list of "new topics" I'm not familiar with and, given the abundance of anecdotes and folklore in those, I don't know how to structure this paper. How do I make sure that I create a piece I can be proud of, but don't get too lost in folklore or detail and get too bogged down
