there are many reasons why you might be interested in setting up a password that has a meaning. first, is to avoid having a password that is simply a dictionary word or a default database password used by other applications. in other cases, it might be because of a policy such as the password must change every 6 months, or a password expiration scheme. the password expiration scheme is recommended as your password's expiration will effectively lock the user out and will help ensure that it is not accidentally used by another user. there are three types of password authentication that the mysql native authentication plugin supports in 5.1. the native password authentication method is the simplest and most secure because it does not use the password authentication that the validate password plugin provides. the login validation method allows the creation of authentication policies that include complex validation criteria based on a user's role, level of privilege or other criteria. the third method is the password authentication which provides you with the most flexibility. with the password authentication you have control over the complexity of the policy and you can specify that only certain kinds of characters or combinations of characters are acceptable. for details about mariadb installation not covered in this guide you can refer to the official documentation on dev.mysql.com
